Sachs and Taryn Gorman The Washington Post Tuesday, August 21, 2006

When most people look for their next home, they dream of a place to raise their kids, a place where they want to live, but where all their other dreams can be fulfilled, too. For most people who move to Washington, their dream home is a house in a good school district. These days, builders are selling houses in Washington's suburbs for $200,000 to $600,000. These are not the houses that most people envision for their home. They are McMansions, lawns the size of football fields, swimming pools in every backyard, garages bigger than the houses, car elevators to help you get into your car without getting out of your car. They are huge houses that offer fewer choices and services than any you can find in many suburban markets in the United States.

These houses are certainly interesting, but they are not a good reflection of what most people want for their families. The suburbs of Washington offer people a great deal of what they want, but not what they actually need. Instead, people in Washington who are seeking houses in their neighborhoods should look for houses that offer services and amenities that are on the cutting edge of what most people want. Instead of spending $200,000 to buy a house in Northwest or Eastover, where most people's needs are already met by other houses in that neighborhood, why not spend an extra $60,000 or $80,000 to live in a house that has a roof garden? They can buy a house that has a movie theatre for the kids, a playground, an elevator, or even a dog run. The homes at 18th Street in Georgetown are not the houses that people envision when they think of where they want to live in Washington. Most people want a house like the one near Hollywood Road in Bethesda, where within a few hundred yards, you have an outdoor pool, a dog run, a dog walker, a dog spa, a dog trainer, a dog washing place,
