Elements Just like the name says, Elements is a tool for creating photo manipulation, as well as a tool for creating more general digital illustrations. In fact, the interface is so similar to the interface in Photoshop (see the preceding section) that new Elements users could easily switch between the two programs after a week or two of training. The palette used in Elements is similar to the palette used in Photoshop.

Elements also has much of the same functionality. Figure 14-11 shows the Elements layout. FIGURE 14-11: The Elements layout is similar to that of Photoshop. As you can see, Elements includes the same tools as Photoshop: * Spot healing tool * Smudge tool * Levels tool * Shadows and highlights tools * Smart Brush * Text tool * Window tool * Bookmark tool However, Elements lacks Photoshop's eraser tool. You use the Eraser tool to remove unwanted parts from an image. Also notice that in Elements you can create a new image layer by using the Shapes tool. You can then make changes to a layer or groups of layers, just as you can in Photoshop. If you're using Photoshop, you might find the features in Elements a little too limited, but for those who favor the Elements software, this is a good reason to make the switch. For more about Elements, see the Chapter 11.

Q: How to get app to run in background?
Can a web page know the current activities a user is doing on an android phone? I mean does the Android OS display my app on screen (like the "running apps" screen)? Or do I have to code my app to run when the screen goes on standby or maybe on the lock screen? If the latter, how to let my app to know that Android OS is doing this? (Whether the screen is locked or not?) A: You don't have to code anything. You can simply use the Android system service "Status and Foreground". For example, you can start a service that runs constantly even when the screen is turned off (takes no power at all) - the problem is, Android will suspend your service if no one starts it anymore, so you have to use some kind of watchdog service that checks for it - in the simplest approach a connected bluetooth device could send a message about your app when it discovers it. For more info about the service see the link Android : Running service in background 1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to a circuit arrangement for the transmission and/or reception of electrical signals over a radio link, comprising an antenna, a transmitter/receiver circuit and a means of frequency selection. 2. Description of the Prior Art A circuit arrangement of the type referred to above is known, for example, from the Siemens Journal 1983, pages 86-93. The circuit arrangement has an antenna, a transmitter/receiver circuit with a first input which is connected to an input signal and with a second input which is connected to an oscillator circuit for generating a transmitting signal and an oscillator circuit for generating a receiving signal. The two oscillator circuits oscillate with different frequencies, are connected to a frequency selector, receive the signal of the oscillator circuit connected to the frequency selector by the first input of the transmitter/receiver circuit and transmit the signal to the frequency selector by way of the second input of the transmitter/receiver circuit. The frequency selector is connected to a transceiver which is connected to the transmitter/receiver circuit via the second input of the transmitter/receiver circuit. By way of a connecting path from the transmission part to the reception part the signal is transmitted from the transmitter/receiver circuit to the reception part. A circuit arrangement of the above described type generally has a plurality of radio transmitters for the transmission of cutaneous and muscle histiocytic and dendritic cell neoplasms. Neoplasms of the histiocytic and dendritic cell system comprise various benign and malignant neoplasms with distinct histopathologic patterns and clinical behavior. The most frequent cutaneous or extra-cutaneous neoplasms are Langerhans cell histiocytosis (LCH), Erdheim-Chester disease, monocytic and cutaneous histiocytoma, xanthomatous histiocytosis, and Rosai-Dorfman disease. Diagnosis of histiocytic and dendritic cell neoplasms can be challenging. Fluorescence in situ hybridization is a diagnostic tool that is helpful in some cases of LCH, Erdheim-Chester disease, and xanthomatous histiocytosis. In other lesions, more broadly defined as histiocytic and dendritic cell neoplasms (HDNCs), immunohistochemistry is mandatory for diagnosis. The aim of this review is to summarize the main findings of diagnostic work-up for cutaneous or muscle HDNCs.
