It is well known in the art that liquid polyester compositions may be prepared by the reaction of the starting monomeric esters with free radical initiating initiators. This process is generally carried out by heating the esters under pressure with a free radical initiator such as an organic peroxide. These esters may be prepared by the reaction of a diester with a dicarboxylic acid in a two-phase system such as water or an alcohol/water system. In such a water/alcohol mixture, the diester is typically hydrolyzed using a base and water. The alcohol or alcohol/water mixture is referred to herein as the "feed". Polyethylene terephthalate (PET) is a well-known linear polyester. PET is prepared by a condensation reaction between dimethyl terephthalate (DMT), or its derivatives, and terephthalic acid, or its derivatives, or by a transesterification reaction between dimethyl terephthalate and terephthaloyl halides. Polyethylene terephthalate polymers may be used in the manufacture of articles that require impact resistance such as clear or colored beverage bottles and the like. Polyethylene terephthalate polymers are used in films and molded articles, including packaging products that require high barrier properties. Polyethylene terephthalate polymers may also be used in films and molded articles, including packaging products, such as bags, bottles and containers, that require mechanical properties, including high modulus and strength. Polyethylene terephthalate resins are used in films for forming packaging materials, such as bags and thermoformed plastic products. It is known in the art that mixing a polyethylene terephthalate and an ethylene glycol polyalkylene terephthalate is useful in order to improve the impact properties of the polyester without affecting the clarity and mechanical properties of a film produced from the compositions. The use of an ethylene glycol polyalkylene terephthalate increases the tensile and flexural modulus of a PET polymer. in the pulmonary arteriole by ED-derived macrophages. Publisher's Note Springer Nature remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.
