Immunologic sensitization following long term exposure to trichloroethanol. A 76-year-old woman developed contact dermatitis in the early 1980s after cleaning with trichloroethanol emulsion, a reactive skin cleanser containing thimerosal and trichloroethanol. She then received a renal transplant and, 4 years later, her dialysis was complicated by a recurrent fungal infection of the peritoneal cavity. In this report we describe the clinical and immunologic manifestations of this 2-year course. It suggests that chronic exposure to trichloroethanol is linked to an immunologic response to the chemical, not a bacterial infection.

Q: Why does the Flight Simulator allow a minor to see the frequencies and encodings of the nav systems? A while back, I flew on a Boeing 747-400
