MATERIAL AND METHOD: A new concept of the surgical closure of the dural sinuses is presented. The sinus has been separated from the surrounding tissues by a suturing technique. The sinus membrane (when present) remains attached to the neck of the frontal, ethmoidal or sphenoidal sinus. The advantages of the new concept are: (a) for patients without dura mater a complete obliteration of the sinus with a stable closure of the sinus opening is guaranteed; (b) the patency of the sinus after closure is easily tested with the help of a water soluble contrast medium which will pass through the sealed sinus and through the medial and lateral sinus openings; (c) minimal edema at the edge of the sinus membrane as well as at the margins of the sinus openings is to be expected. Based on the new concept of the closure of the sinus, a number of surgical techniques have been evolved. These are presented in detail. Gentleman, I am not your vegan-pretzel supplier.
