A mosque on the outskirts of Sidon, Lebanon has become embroiled in controversy after an Islamic court threw out a child bride a day after her wedding. According to reports, the girl, who was only 14 years old at the time, had been coerced into the marriage by her uncle, who allegedly physically forced her into a secret marriage. The case sparked widespread concern in the country as the informal courts cannot prosecute minors for crimes. Lebanon is the only Arab country in the world that allows child marriage, with around one third of teenage girls forced into marriage between the ages of 15 and 19, according to a 2013 UNICEF report. Sharia, or Islamic, law in Lebanon dictates that a girl of nine years old and boys eight years old can be married. After the wedding, the girl was taken to an apartment where the newlywed couple lived together with her uncle for a year, after which the girl reportedly returned to live with her family. She was then allowed to live with her husband and have children, although the Islamic authorities later returned her to the protection of her family, according to reports.
